

A fluorescence microscopy image showing a network of neurons and blood vessels. The neurons are stained in shades of green and yellow, with their cell bodies and branching processes clearly visible. The blood vessels are stained in bright red, forming a complex, branching network that overlaps with the neurons. The background is dark, making the fluorescent structures stand out.

nature medicine

VOLUME 17 NUMBER 2 FEBRUARY 2011
www.nature.com/naturemedicine

Imaging brain disease in vivo
How hyperglycemia hinders hemostasis
Brown fat fuels the burn